Thompson started his career in show business as in-house counsel for Capitol Records where he negotiated the famed Beatles breakup. By the 1970s, he was a founding partner in the entertainment law firm of Thompson, Shankman, Bond and Moss where he packaged movie and television projects and represented the careers of many prominent actors and performers. He also orchestrated the $300 million dollar merger between Harrahs and Holiday Inn. When the law partnership was amicably dissolved, Thompson created the Larry A. Thompson Organization, a company devoted to film production and personal management of talent.

Thompson, with two other lawyers, Harry Sloan and Larry Kuppin, subsequently purchased New World Pictures from Roger Corman for $16.5 million dollars and immediately took the company public. He sold his New World equity position in 1983 and refocused his attention to independent film production and talent management.

Thompson and his team of managers guided the careers of over 200 artists including, among others, William Shatner, Drew Barrymore, Cindy Crawford, Barry White, Shannen Doherty, Mariska Hargitay, Linda Evans, Cicely Tyson, Tatum O'Neal, Donna Mills, Linda Blair, Bruce Boxleitner, Justine Bateman, Alan Thicke, Donna Dixon, William Devane, Richard Pryor, Tori Spelling, Robert Blake, Merle Haggard, Iman, Steve Guttenberg, Sally Kellerman, Delta Burke, and Sonny & Cher. In 1998, other than continuing to represent William Shatner, whom he has managed since 1980, Scott Hamilton, Alan Thicke, Tracey Gold, Clive Robertson, and Philip Boyd, Thompson decided to devote the majority of his attention to Film, Television and New Media Production.
